FOR THE RECORD

January 5, 2006

Voting method — An article in the Dec. 26 California section about a Citizens' Assembly proposal for the state described a voting method recommended by a similar assembly in British Columbia, Canada. The article said that in the Canadian proposal, voters could make three choices for the provincial government, so that three people, rather than one, would represent each district. In fact, voters could make any number of choices, and the number of people representing the districts could vary.
